Anxious Coverage is dominated by a gas pipeline explosion near Tishreen power plant that knocked out three power stations and worsened rationing across Damascus and the south, alongside a deadly gunfire attack on a bus of company workers near Masyaf Bridge in Homs that killed seven. Public commentary shows deep suspicion that both incidents are sabotage or factional violence, with sectarian undertones around the Homs attack given claims of Alawite victims. Separately, the US removing Syria from its arms export ban list drew mixed public reaction, some hopeful about normalization and others skeptical given continuing Israeli strikes and Hezbollah-related accusations in Daraa. Kurdish-language audiences focused heavily on unrelated Iraqi Kurdish unity messaging, showing a distinct discourse largely separate from Arabic-language Syrian news.
