Divided Outlets continue heavy coverage of Israeli incursions in Quneitra and Daraa, investment and banking diplomacy, and sports/cultural events, while public conversation is more fragmented and skeptical, focused on Hasakah tensions, the Ras al-Maara shooting, floods, and daily economic grievances. Kurdish-language audiences express distinct anxieties about integration and Kurdish rights, often distrustful of Damascus, while Arabic commenters show weary nationalism, sectarian suspicion, and dark humor about corruption and bureaucracy. International stories like the flydubai co-pilot case and Hezbollah-Damascus talks spark speculation and distrust. Overall sentiment is mixed: official/economic coverage is upbeat, but public sentiment is anxious, mocking, or resigned.
