Divided The dominant story was reporting that Syria is weighing sending troops to Saudi Arabia against the Houthis, which dominated outlet coverage and sparked a huge, largely angry and mocking public reaction fearing Syrians becoming 'mercenaries' while Israel still occupies southern Syria. Outlets also covered al-Sharaa's Riyadh visit and UAE call, oil pipeline sabotage in Hasakah, smuggling clashes on the Lebanese border, and the new advanced-technology education decree, mostly in neutral-to-positive official tones. Public discourse diverged sharply by audience: Arabic commenters were angry and sarcastic about the Yemen deployment and Israeli incursions, Kurdish-language posts focused on north-east integration and returns disputes, and English-language posts debated geopolitics and Israeli politics with more analytical detachment.
