1. The day at a glance

Divided Outlets heavily covered President al-Sharaa's Riyadh visit with MBS, the arrest of a senior ISIS commander in Homs, and Israeli shelling in Quneitra/Daraa, alongside economic deals (Eagle Hills, UAE banking MOU) and Syrian Airlines' rebrand. Public reaction was mixed: many welcomed the Saudi ties and investment news hopefully, while others mocked official narratives, voiced fatigue over daily life problems (fuel quality, road repairs, housing disputes), and expressed anger over Assad-era crimes and current security talk shows. Kurdish-language posts highlighted distinct grievances over education policy, Afrin/Kobani student exclusion, and the Rojava/SDF integration process, framed differently from Arabic-language audiences. Discussions of Israel, Gaza, Yemen and the Houthi strikes drew strong international solidarity statements from Damascus alongside angry and sectarian public commentary online.
