Divided Coverage this period centers on the reopening of Aleppo's Great Umayyad Mosque, which drew widespread public celebration and religious sentiment, alongside unrest in Hasakah where internal security forces fired on Kurdish protesters, sparking sharp divisions between Arabic and Kurdish-language audiences. Israeli incursions in Quneitra and Daraa, the Alfa Watan ship sinking, diplomatic meetings with the US and Turkey, and denials of sending Syrian troops to Yemen also featured prominently. Public reaction ranges from religious joy over the mosque reopening to anger and sectarian framing around Hasakah, mixed with weary skepticism toward diplomacy and economic news.
