Frustrated Public discourse is dominated by anger over the fuel/gasoline scandal and skepticism toward official explanations, grief and alarm over the Salamiya road security killings, and continuing distrust around Israeli incursions in the south and Suwayda. Kurdish-language audiences are sharply split over Mazloum Abdi's integration talks in Erbil, with some praising unity gains and others calling them a surrender. Outlets maintain a steady, often upbeat tone on diplomacy (OPCW), economy deals and reconstruction, while ordinary commenters are far more cynical, mocking government competence and voicing economic hardship.
